The applicant's claims

The applicant has applied for the grant of a Visitor visa (subclass 600) to visit Australia for a temporary stay.

Information and evidence considered

I am a delegated decision maker under section 65 of the Migration Act 1958. In reaching my decision, I have considered the following:

- relevant legislation contained in the Migration Act and Migration Regulations 1994
- information contained in the Department's Procedural Instructions
- documents and information provided by the applicant(s)
- relevant information held on Departmental files.

Findings

On the basis of all the information available to me, including the documents and information the applicant provided, I find that the criteria for the grant of a Visitor (Tourist) visa in the Tourist stream are not satisfied.

Reasons

I have assessed the application and the reasons for my decision are detailed below.

An application for a Visitor (Tourist) visa in the Tourist stream has been made by the applicant.

A visa cannot be granted unless the relevant criteria specified in the Migration Act and the Migration Regulations are satisfied.

In this case, I am not satisfied that clause 600.211 in Schedule 2 of the Migration Regulations is satisfied. This clause provides that:

600.211

The applicant genuinely intends to stay temporarily in Australia for the purpose for which the visa is granted, having regard to:

- (a) whether the applicant has complied substantially with the conditions to which the last substantive visa, or any subsequent bridging visa, held by the applicant was subject; and*
- (b) whether the applicant intends to comply with the conditions to which the Subclass 600 visa would be subject; and*
- (c) any other relevant matter.*

In assessing whether or not the applicant genuinely intends to stay temporarily in Australia, I have taken into account information provided in the application, the applicant's immigration history and compliance with previous visas. I have also taken into consideration any supporting documents as well as the applicant's personal circumstances, commitments, and incentive to return to their country of residence.

My decision is based on the following factors

Under policy when considering "any other relevant matter", decision makers may take into account a wide range of considerations to determine whether an applicant genuinely intends a temporary stay in Australia. This may include, but is not limited to, the applicant's employment, economic and family circumstances, their credibility, the claimed purpose and period of stay, and the applicant's previous travel history.

The applicant has stated in the visa application (and supporting evidence), that the main purpose of the proposed travel is to visit friend(s) in Australia.

I note that the applicant has provided a letter of support from their onshore friend(s).

Whilst letters of support and guarantees offered by family, friends, business associates, or relatives in Australia are important in assisting the decision-maker to consider the merits of each case, they are not in themselves sufficient evidence of a genuine visit. The onus is on the applicant to demonstrate their own circumstances and incentives to depart Australia at the end of their proposed stay period.

From the information provided, the applicant claims to be self-employed in Vietnam. However, insufficient verifiable documentation was submitted to demonstrate the significant income generated from the business. I am therefore not in a position to find that the business produces sufficient profit or income, or that it would constitute a strong economic incentive to return their country of residence.

In considering the applicant's overall financial circumstances, I note that they have provided some evidence of an amount of money to support their intended stay, which is their financial statement(s) showing a current bank balance and term deposit(s) held in a bank. Although I note the financial statements as given, I have attached little weight to this as evidence of the applicant's financial means, as on its own, it cannot be considered as significant evidence of the applicant's overall financial situation. I am also not satisfied that the applicant has the ability to accumulate the funds presented, and therefore that these are the personal funds of the applicant. As such, I do not consider that the applicant has strong economic incentives to return at the end of the applicant's proposed stay in Australia.

I appreciate that the applicant has provided evidence of ownership of assets, which may be considered an encouragement for the applicant to return. However, I have considered the applicant's other circumstances as a whole, as noted in this decision record, to have a combined weight which is more significant than just the assets presented by the applicant. Furthermore, while I note that the applicant appears to receive ongoing rent from their asset(s), they will apparently continue to receive this regardless of whether they continue to reside in their home country, or whether they reside in Australia. Therefore, I do not consider the ownership of assets in this case to be a significant incentive for the applicant to return.

I also note from the details and evidence provided in the application, that the applicant has limited previous international travel. The Department's policy in this area is that weight in favour of the applicant can be given on the applicants' compliance with the immigration laws of countries with similarly significant incentives to remain, and that similarly, officers may have discretion where there is a lack of travel history. As such, I accord little weight to the applicant's previous international travel history in favour of the applicant demonstrating that they genuinely intend a temporary stay.

In assessing these criteria, I have taken into account the information provided in the applicant's visa application form and the supporting documents provided. On balance, I find that the applicant has not demonstrated sufficiently strong employment, economic, family or other commitments in home country that would be sufficient incentive for the applicant to return.

After considering the information provided, I am not satisfied that the applicant genuinely intends to stay temporarily in Australia for the purposes set out above.

Therefore, I am not satisfied that the applicant meets the relevant criteria in clause 600.211 in Schedule 2 of the Migration Regulations.

Decision

As clause 600.211 is not satisfied, I find the criteria for the grant of a Visitor (Tourist) visa in the Tourist stream are not satisfied. Therefore, I refuse the application by the applicant for a Visitor (Tourist) visa in the Tourist stream.

Yours sincerely
